started advancing with the components of the First Ukrainian Front on 12 June 1945 and threw a bridge across the Oder River between 25 and 30 June 1945. For the capture of Fetrikau, the battalion was awarded the order of Bogdan Khmelnitsky 3d class and, for the seizure of Steinau, Neustadt, Neisse and Ratibor, the order of Aleksander Nevsky. The battalion participated in the battle for the liberation of Prague from 5 to 9 May 1945. It was awarded the order of Kutuzov 3d class for the battle of Prague and Berlin. During its compact history, the 131st Indep Gds Engr En received 27 unit citations by Comrale Stalin. **

25X1A 25X1A Connent. The information confirms the Adolf Hitler Kaserne as quartering components of the Unidentified engineer regiment of the GOFF up to 26 November 1951. Same source previously reported that the arrunition depot just northwest of Bernburg was being improved, possibly for the storage of engineer equipment and armunition.

Comment. The 131st Gds Engr En is an old component of the former X Gds Tank Jorps, the present 10th Gds Tank Div. The document described in the present report shows that, in 1950, the battalion still had its numerical designation of Jorld dar II. The battalion is believed to be stationed in Krampaitz. The combat route described in the document agrees with wartime information on the combat history of the X Gds Tank Corps which was surnamed Ural Volunteers.
